5.	The headquarters company and the reconnaissance company were equipped with Czech model 48-A and B submachine guns and Czech model 26 light machine guns. The heavy weapons company was observed training with three 45-mm guns; seven or eight guns of the same caliber were seen in the company's ordnance room. The regiment's morter company had morters of 80 and 120-mm caliber, the latter drawn by a team of horses. Each infantry company of the I Bn was armed with German model 98 rifles, Czech model 26 light machine guns, and training bazookas. The heavy machine gun company had Czech model 37 heavy machine guns on carts, the gun company 45-mm guns, and the morter company 80-mm and 120-mm morters.  placed with motor vehicles.

6.	troop training grounds in early May 1950. Several tanks from Strasice (N 50/L 34) were attached to the division for the duration of the maneuvers, which were witnessed by two Soviet field-grade officers.  a drivers' school was to be opened in Hamry on 1 December	25 X 1
	1950. Preparatory training of drivers in Nyrsko was to start on 15 November 1950. (4)	23/1
7.	the population of Nyrsko would be resettled and troops with tanks and heavy guns would move to Nyrsko.	25 X 1
8.	In early September 1950, five Soviet officers arrived in Nyrsko for an inspection of the military quarters. Among them were a colonel and a lieutenant colonel who were also seen at a troop review in Susice two weeks later.
9.	The roadsleading to the border in the Nyrsko area were blocked by chevaux-de - frise, trenches and some mines.	•

(1)	The infantry unit in Nyrsko was established as the 23 Inf Bn in late 1948. It was mentioned for the first time as 23d Inf Regt, when its surname was changed in April 1949.	_ 25 X 1
	referred to the unit as a regiment since then, although it consisted of only	25X1
	En. It seems possible, however, that the term regiment was justified, if the unit is a cadre regiment of regimental units and one full-size battalion. The present report states that Unit is organized	25X1 into three battalions. This, however, requires substantiation, especially because fails to supply details on two battalions. It is also	25 X 1 doubted that an additional battalion should be stationed in Bystrice, where only two companies have been located before. This would be possible, however.	25X1
	if a new cantonment was opened.	25 X 1
	For the time being, the unit will still be carried with its previous strength, it being immaterial whether it is designated as an infantry brigade or cadre division. Besides the 23d Inf Regt, the unit includes the 10th Arty Regt	23/1
Ī	the 26th Inf En or Regt in Kasperske Hory; and the 66th Inf En or	25X1

(2)	Valenta, (fmu), was a major and as chief of staff of the 18th Inf Regt.	25 X 1
(3)	The information on the organisation is probably incorrect in some points. The regimental units include a gum company instead of a heavy weapons company, while mortars and light AT gums constitute the equipment of the heavy weapons company with the battalions.
4)	The mansuvers were held at the Boletice troop training grounds, west of Cesky Krumlov. The tanks probably belonged to the 23d Tank Brig in Strasice.
